

The draft presents some notable freaks of fortune in Oxford. There are no less than eleven duplicates of brothers in as many different families; three are drawn from the store of Clarke & Co., including F. G. Clarke of the firm; two from the Dentistry establishment of Eccleston & Parsons, including the latter, two colored men. The Times Office comes in for one representative. The professions escape the draft generally. More than one-half of the list are farmers, and the balance divided quite generally among the trades and business occupations. Even our friend Weeks of the News Depot, is among the favorites of fortune. We only wish that he could parcel out his patriotism to ten men of abler body and sounder limbs, he has energy for them all. We dropped in to congratulate him on having been selected to join the great army of the Republic, and found him smoking, his faithful crutch keeping him company. His entire coolness and self-possession called forcibly to mind the anecdote of old Put and the keg of onions. The following persons are drafted from the
